There is no such term as “the most religious”. Each nation believes in God as they perceive and comprehend Him. Each nation has believers and non-believers, and everything is up to their level of spiritual development. If a country does not have temples, mosques or monasteries in every neighbourhood, this does not mean that people are less spiritual there. You can believe without leaving your home. God is omnipresent and is everywhere – in you, and in your soul. And He always hears your addresses. And He helps you depending on your relationship to the surrounding world.
